1. The first step is to identify the variables in the model. In this case, the variables are the number of hours worked per week ( $X_1$ ), the number of children under the age of 18 in the household ( $X_2$ ), and the number of children under the age of 18 in the household who are under the age of 6 ( $X_3$ ).

Figure 1 illustrates the experimental setup. A subject is seated at a table, looking at a video screen. A camera is positioned above the screen. The screen displays a target (a small circle) and a starting point (a larger circle). The subject's hand is positioned at the starting point. The distance between the starting point and the target is labeled 'D'. The distance between the starting point and the video screen is labeled 'L'. The distance between the video screen and the camera is labeled 'C'. The distance between the camera and the target is labeled 'T'. The distance between the camera and the starting point is labeled 'S'.

The diagram illustrates the experimental setup for measuring the rate of reaction. It consists of a reaction vessel (a beaker or flask) containing a solution of a reactant. A stirrer is used to mix the solution, and a thermometer is placed in the solution to monitor its temperature. The reaction vessel is connected to a gas collection system. This system includes a gas syringe, which is used to measure the volume of gas produced during the reaction. The gas syringe is connected to a delivery tube that leads into a water trough. The gas is collected in the water trough, displacing water. The volume of gas collected is measured by the displacement of water in the trough. The diagram is labeled with various components and their functions, such as 'Reaction vessel', 'Stirrer', 'Thermometer', 'Gas syringe', 'Delivery tube', and 'Water trough'.
